

Prague welcomes the project FINERPOL interregional Event

The capital city of Prague hosted the partners of the European project Interreg Europe FINERPOL in the date of 21st September to 23rd September. In these days, there was also held an important conference on “Attractiveness and Use of Financial Instruments in the Czech Republic”.

Finerpol is a partnership project, in which nine institutions from EU countries actively cooperate. Project and individual conferences held in each partner country enable the public authorities across Europe to exchange experience, ideas and innovative solutions concerning the modus operandi of public policies and the creation of financial instruments for Energy Investments in Buildings, mainly supported by the ERDF and European Commission.

Based on the analysis of nearly one hundred examples of best practice and financial instruments in seven regions, but also more than 30 meetings of partners and stakeholders in the field of inter-regional transfer of experience,

Action plans will be created. It will include the improved definitions of financial instruments and their implementation will be monitored and evaluated during the next two years. The Platform thus provides the scope for finding solution and improvements, particularly in development strategies. The other objective of the project is also contribution to better operational programs implementation by its outputs like, for example, the involvement of key local stakeholders from the private, academic and public sphere to the dialogue, from which subsequent solutions and recommendations are generated.

“We have a very interesting opportunity to participate in this international project that should bring many important outcomes for improvements to our operational program. In the first project meeting in Merida, there was an interesting range of entities who brought the useful contribution to the field during their expert debate. The Prague Interregional event will surely continue in this trend.” said Jan Hauser, the Director of the European Funds Department of

City of Prague.
